

Morgan stars in soap opera on Collins St

THE market research staff working for Gary Morgan have polled themselves and disapprove of the old-fashioned cakes of soap in the toilets. The National Union of Workers has approached Morgan about conditions in his quaint Collins Street HQ and suggested liquid-soap dispensers would be more hygienic. The union also said two toilets per sex on each floor was inadequate for the number of bladders queuing. Morgan, a gent who often gets into a lather about civic matters, declared: "What a joke! The unions are trying to get members! We are the last Australian market research company of any size conducting interviews from Australia! We have on 10 floors, one or two bathrooms with a shower, plus normal lavatories!" Morgan kindly extended an invitation for an inspection, a handy offer should the need arise when in the area. The wash-up staff have no consumer confidence in cakes of soap and vote for liquid soap.
